Taiken 9 does not become dry and chewy even if it has gone cold, which makes it suitable for plain rice meals or sushi dishes; Carrying a taro flavor, Tainung No. 71 (Yihchuan Aromatic Rice) is the famous invincible of paddy competition; the hearty, al dente, and sticky Taiken 2 is of a large size. It is particularly suitable for preparing fired rice; Tainan No. 11 is the country's first high-yielding rice variety, with its quality highly praised by the Japanese; though with unattractive appearance, the popular Kaohsiung No. 139, also known as "the ugly beauty", is with an awesome mouthfeel and stickiness. Take a glance at the paddy waves and have a bite of the aromatic rice. Go down to the paddy fields to experience the farming chores, such as rice reaping, rice shoots transplanting, and mochi pounding. The rice and paddy filed of Taiwan is not just a scrumptious treat, charming scenery; it is also a relish with an enjoyable delight.

extensive, the country consists of manifold landforms where hills, mountains, plains, and brooks interlace one another. Additionally, as involved with the contributing factors including history and policies, most of the agricultural lands in Taiwan are cultivated by peasants who are diligent and thrifty. Guarding and practicing farming on a farmland which covers only 1 or 2 hectares. these peasants are simple and content with what they have, which makes the farm crops of Taiwan versatile and varied. Bearing no resemblance to the vast and boundless crop landscape of continental countries, the agricultural lands of fruits and vegetables in Taiwan is strong in diversification. Whereas some are planted outdoors, others are meticulously taken care of inside a greenhouse. The crops include pumpkins, sweet corns, turmeric, scallions sweet potatoes, and radishes. Despite being rather small, every vegetable garden is filled with the freshness and tastiness of the earth. What is more attractive is the intimate relationship between the farmers and the lands. smell by making death-defying effort.

at all seasons. The fishery of Taiwan is full of fun.

one can realize the fact that Taiwan is indeed a kingdom by the sea.

of the Catch of the Day Surrounded by sea, Taiwan is abundant in ocean resources brought by the warm trends. From north to south, west to east, onshore to offshore islands of Taiwan, from freshest seasonal seafood to aquaculture and leisure, unique fishing methods and trading spectacles can be seen

Every summer, the fishermen in North Coast Jinshan exploit the flashy blaze of light produced by sulfur stones to catch schools of scaled sardine by attracting their leap into the hand operating dip net. As thousands of thousands of fish stocks bound under the spotlight, the fishermen smile radiantly and embrace the harvesting moment. "Sulfuric Fire Fishing" is not intensively close to the sea surface. The fishermen will throw out swiftly the harpoon to spear the swordfish that swim speedily like a sprinter. "Spear fishing" is not just a method of fishing but the desperately fight of the fisher folks as they have to take the risk of getting injured or falling overboard for obtaining high income and the freshest delicacies without fishy

A tableau of more abundance is displayed when it comes to the making of mullet roes around winter solstice. The golden yellow fish roes cover the fishing ports in Hsinchu Siangshan, Yunlin Kouhu, Tainan, and Kaohsiung, announcing the joy and approach of Chinese New Year in advance. Freshness can be found everywhere: Sakura shrimp and Bluefin tuna in Donggang, Spanish mackerel and squid in Penghu, and crabs in Wanli North Coast. One can partake in many activities, such as the competition of clam digging, rowing and dredging up seaweed, prawn fishing, Sturgeon hugging, Taiwanese beach seine and gabion collecting, the eight divinatory trigrams net casting, oyster shell string making, and freshly-grilled oysters relishing, Perhaps it is only by peeping at the glamor of intertidal zone, visiting a fish market to listen to the cries of peddlers, or observing quietly the flow and fluidity of traditional fishing culture that

The swordfish swim towards our island by following the Kuroshio Current every autumn. The fishermen in Taitung Chenggung will hop on the fishing boat and stand at the bow by relying on two cloth rings which support the body, holding a javelin in their hands. Sometimes the tides can reach up to two or three meters high, and sometimes the waves dance and move only a brilliant fish-catching technique but also a graceful cultural heritage.

Delicate and Mellow Aroma of Roasted Beans

A sun-exposed environment with plenty of mountains, water, and sunlight provides ideal conditions, Coffee has built up its own unique character since it came to Taiwan a hundred years ago. In contemporary Taiwan, coffee is in a period of vigorous development in succession to tea. What it has been developing is not just the beans but also the Taiwan has a cluster of coffee talents that one may acounter a coffee expert who has won an award of coffee an roasting, latte art, hand drip, and coffee cupping in ist around the corner. Besides, the number of coffee shop is fabulously high: from specialty shop, funky café, and can always smell rich aroma of freshly brewed coffee permeating the air in every alley.

Taiwan's native coffee beans are of excellent quality and distinctive flavor. However, since the coffee beans are mostly organically planted and man-made gathered by farmers, the yields are rather in small volume with costly prices. The native coffee beans are the apple of many coffee experts' eyes. Similar to tea leaves, different altitudes, climatic conditions, and soil environments produce varied terroirs. For example, the aftertaste of Alishan coffee is impeccable because of its high altitude; Hualien Ruisui had once been one of the three major coffee origins in Taiwan during the Japanese colonial period; Yunlin Gukeng is the first production area that has driven the trends of Taiwanese coffee culture.

Other bean varieties include Tainan Dongshan, Nantou Guoshing, Huisun Forest Area, Pingtung Sandimen, Yilan Nanao, and Taitung Jhihben, Daren, some of which are grown independently in an environment where sky is always clear while some are planted under betel nut or longan trees in mountains surrounded by floating clouds and misty haze. Each type of Taiwanese coffee is with its own extraordinary,
