Provincial Highway 3 points of interest

We have designed 32 sightseeing routes for tourists to visit farms and countryside, where you will meet experience fragrances of flowers, fruits, and tea.

The farming scenes along Provincial Highway 3 Take your time and tour with the seasons . . . . .

Provincial Highway 3, also called the highway of inner mountains, mostly goes through uplands--between high mountains and plains--where culture is rich, output is bountiful, and seasons are distinct. It is a highway worthy of repeated visits. In stark contrast to traditional norms for travel, contemporary tourists have opted for slow, in-depth trips, for example following farmers into their fields to pick fruits, going up mountains to see the flowers of the season, drinking tea made with tea leaves that are cultivated locally with local soil and water. These all enable the travelers gain deeper impression and appreciation of where they have visited.

What are the six levels of industrialization?

The term "six levels of industrialization" originates from Japan that was intended to liven up the agricultural, forestry, and fishing industries and assist with the transformation of agriculture. Simply put, the term refers to an industrialization of a product by multiplying agricultural production (one level) by agricultural processing (two levels) by product sales (three levels), yielding six levels. This concept of multiplication leads to increased revenue for producers, industrial upgrades, and higher added values.

For example, a persimmon orchard was once simply a place of production. Now, activities such as persimmon picking, guided tour on making dehydrated persimmons, and persimmon dying DIY combine nature, ecology, and culture with production, making the activities educational and transforming pure agriculture into an agricultural leisure industry. Consumers not only get to appreciate the hard work of producers but also learn more about local culture and customs. This connects producers with consumers in a positive cycle.

Let's talk about food and agriculture education.

Food and agriculture have been inextricably intertwined since the get-go. In the agricultural age, each family was often responsible for every step in the entire life cycle of an agricultural crop, from production, harvest, processing, to food on the table. However, with the advent of the industrial age, people have been separated further and farther from agriculture. Food, agriculture, and land have almost totally been removed from the daily lives of people in this time and age.

Food safety incidents in recent years have led people to pay more attention to food. Topics like slow food, local production and consumption, low carbon food, and from production to dining room table have been raised. These topics can all be included in the broadly defined food and agriculture education.

Food and agriculture education includes farming experience and dining education. Through hands-on participation and learning, people can rediscover the real relationship between people and food, such as cultivation methods that are friendly to the environment, knowledge of the seasonality of fruits, and correct way of eating. More importantly, this helps people know this land and appreciate their food and environment.

Let's follow the season to enjoy the happiness flower viewing and fruits picking.

This time, this publication has designed 32 routes to guide tourists to farms and fields. You may get into the swing of things, take part in various activities, or have a meal with a farming family or a Hakka meal. You may shuttle between small towns in the mountains and listen to their stories. Let this trip along Provincial Highway 3 leave you with rich and warm hospitality and cultural memory, a stark contrast to your past trips which you probably forgot about the moment you finished the trip.

Influence Spring trips SPRING

The weather is getting warmer, and buds are emerging on branches. Do you also feel the arrival of spring? Hurry and take off your heavy clothing. Follow the flowers, the fruits, and the fragrant teas to their homes in a mini trip to show the natural beauty to the world. Make this a different trip for the season. Only in spring and summer can you see Hydrangea macrophylla, so make sure that you capture them in your photos. Follow the farmers to sweet peaches, or perhaps bend down, like those tea pickers, to pick tea leaves in a tea farm. You may also get into the mountains to experience the fun of picking shiitake in shiitake farms. These scenery and experiences are all perfect photo materials for the internet postings.

Come and enjoy the fresh flower salad.
